APPENDIX 1: C. Brockelmann's Preface to the First Edition

Carl Brockelmann greets his readers!

I would like to add several things to what Th. Nöldeke said in his Preface to my book.

I have employed the Greek Syriac vocalization signs in the manner of the Jacobites [i.e. as in WSy], except for [e] and [o], where I have maintained them following the tradition of the Nestorians [i.e. as in ESy]. I have followed the authority [of the vocalization] of the [Syriac] Bible, together with that of Barhebraeus' commentaries, and that of the Syriac lexicographers, primarily Elias of Nisibe, according to the Gotha ms. No one is ignorant of their value in this matter. I have noted some words which are denoted, according to Barhebraeus' grammar, both according to the Nestorian and the Jacobite vocalizations, with additional material treated by Martin in JAP 6/19 (1872), pp. 305ff.

I have arranged the meanings of the words in the order suggested by the sense and have not paid attention to the so-called 'primary' meanings, which must be extrapolated, or if one prefers, derived.

I have added material from cognate languages [in the etymological sections] only for those [homographic] roots which need to be distinguished since they derive from originally different [Semitic] roots that have now coalesced into one form according to the rules of linguistic development. Concerning loanwords, I have referred to the original sources with the exception of Greek words which can easily be understood. For Persian, I have referred the reader mainly to the work of Paul de Lagarde, who nearly always gives details concerning scholarly opinion. Therefore, I think I can say that I have been able to rely on the praiseworthy work of others.

P. Jensen informs the readers that by adding his own name following Assyrian words, he indicates that he was the first to understand the significance of words already previously compared by him to prove that the Syriac word was derived from Assyrian.

In order not to increase the book's size too greatly, I prepared the Latin-Syriac index in the following manner: I especially collected the active verbs, but omitted th epassive ones and the derived nouns. Thus, e.g. if one is looking for the Syriac equivalent of 'cingulum', one should look for it under 'cinxit'.

I owe the Addenda et Emendanda, as well as many other matters, both to various scholars who are mentioned further on and to my reading in various books which were published or acquired while the dictionary was in press. Words in the Syrohexapla are taken from the Syriac Index in the Appendix to FieldHex2, pp. 62–64, the knowledge of which I owe to Baethgen.

Following the instructions of the most esteemed publisher, who did not want this book to be accessible only to our countrymen, I have employed Latin. I was, however, apprehensive about this, since I did not pay meticulous attention to the purity of the language, imitating medieval literature more often than the writing of Cicero. I will not be offended if this bothers purists. I have translated Th. Nöldekes Preface into Latin, which he wrote in the vernacular [i.e. German].

As the [above-mentioned] learned scholar described in his Preface, I have tried to the best of my ability to make this little work, such as it is, be commensurate with the unimpaired measure of an ideal Syriac dictionary. I have avoided as much as possibile making corrections and emendations [in cited texts]. I would request that those who wish to criticize my work should bear in mind that I compiled this dictionary out of dire necessity after having examined all of the Syriac texts to which I had access, and looked after its printing, in the short time span of two and a half years. It is too long a story to tell what impelled me – I, who, having devoted myself to Arabic literature had always hoped to be able to do research on it – to undertake this work, "worthy of hard labour". If by such a tedious task I may be judged to have helped in some way the study of Syriac literature, I do not regret having undertaken it.

It remains for me to render my heartfelt thanks to the directors of the libraries which assisted me with books, viz. those of Strasbourg, Berlin, Gotha, Rostock, Breslau. My beloved teacher, Theodor Nöldeke, who paved the way for me for this work by means of his scholarly works and instruction, and who himself encouraged me repeatedly when I was bogged down in my work, supported me when I was slipping, encouraged me when I was in despair, and, lastly, kindly agreed to recommend this volume to the scholarly community by appending his Preface; Siegmund Fraenkel, who, having agreed to assist me in reading the proofs from the second fascicle onwards, kindly communicated to me by letter those matters noticed by himself and also by Immanuel Löw; Peter Jensen, who elucidated those words borrowed into Syriac from Assyrian, either those that he had discovered himself or those which he considered to have been correctly discovered by others; A. Bevan, R. Duval, L. Techen, and J. Wellhausen, who corresponded with me concerning those matters which they found missing or incorrectly explained in individual fascicles.

APPENDIX 2: Th. Nöldeke's Preface to the First Edition

I had promised the most esteemed publisher to write only a short preface to Brockelmann's Lexicon Syriacum. However, as soon as I read the prospectus prepared at the request of the publisher, I understood that I had promised something unnecessary, since – not only as he himself explained – was there a real need for new Syriac dictionary, as I too had felt for a long time, but he himself had even proposed all of the rules which I approved for writing the book. I am not able, however, to write about a work that has only just been published, since I do not as yet know it well enough. It is indeed easy to point out in a particular dictionary many assiduous and careful good points, as well as many that are not so superb. However, no one can judge how much value there is in the real thing unless he has used it for a long time. Though I cannot do this, nevertheless I will write the Preface, particularly since it was promised in the already published fascicles. In order for that decision not to seem to impair the approval of the remainder of this dictionary, I wish that this Preface be excused in some way.

Anyone who teaches Syriac literature to students must be aware that we lack a concise and adequate Syriac dictionary which may be purchased for a modest price. While E. Castellus' seven-language dictionary[1] should not be denigrated for its own time, it does not equal the quality of the works of Buxtorf[2] or of Ludolf.[3] The Syriac section of this work, which J.D. Michaelis prepared separately, benefited scholarship greatly, but it has been insufficient now for some time. This is because the price, which previously was quite reasonable, was greatly augmented by the antiquarian book dealers after the book went out of print. Payne Smith's enormous Thesaurus Syriacus has now appeared, but apart from the fact that it is not yet finished, it is inaccessible to beginners, and its price is too expensive for many. Moreover, anyone who has become proficient in the Syriac language and its literature will not be reproached for using a Syriac Handwörterbuch. Finally, it is to be hoped, that with the availability of a Syriac Handwörterbuch, both Christian and Jewish theological students will be attracted to study the Syriac language and to read Syriac texts carefully, something which they have not done so far.

Our Arabic lexicons have indeed been prepared satisfactorily enough, although they should undertake again to deal anew with the large number of words collected and organized by the Arabic lexicographers. A Syriac scholarly dictionary, however, must be constructed on the basis of a wide reading of Syriac texts. Its author will certainly not neglect using the large amount of material that Payne Smith has collected with great industry, but he ought to base himself primarily on his own strengths. He should illustrate the words that he finds in the Peshiṭta and in the translated texts written before the Arab conquest by quotations from them. Works written at a later date, until about the 14th century, should come next. Subsequent works should be used with the greatest caution.

It is very difficult to define in any certain fashion which foreign words should be included. The medieval Syriac lexica present many Greek entries, some of which have been greatly corrupted phonetically. Quotations from these from the so-called later 'poets' have been included for the sake of poetic usage. Since similar usages are attested even earlier, such words can hardly be omitted from the lexicon. On the other hand, phrases such as ܐܦܘܕܐܝܟܣܝ (ἀποδεῖξαι) and ܐܬܦܪܣܬ (ἐξορισθῆναι) which were never used in normal Syriac speech – and thus were declared later on to be incorrect and were excluded by the Nestorians, even though they are already found in writings of the fifth century – should be included in the dictionary. [Classical] Greek words [found in Syriac texts] can be understood even though many of them are not explained in the dictionary. However, it is by no means possible to entirely disregard du Cange's Glossarium or a similar work for words of the later period. The many words of Persian origin found in the medieval lexica should be retained, since a large number of them stem from popular speech or texts, among which one should enumerate particularly almost all of the acts of the martyrs.

As for nominal derivatives of verbal roots, the lexicographer may restrict himself narrowly. The agent noun ܦܥܠܢܐ can be formed from the verb stem ܦܥܠ, the agent noun ܡܦܥܠܢܐ from the verb stem ܦܥܠ, and so on. Participles may be passed over in silence, unless – due to their particular form or sense – certain peculiarities need to be explained. Thus, it is very often, unnecessary to enumerate the forms ܦܥܠܢܐ, ܡܦܥܠܢܐ, ܡܬܦܥܠܢܐ, etc. which stem directly from verbs. Again, the formation of abstract nominal forms in ܐܝܬ- and adverbs ending in ܐܝܬ, e.g. ܐܝܬܒܛܒܘܬܐ and ܒܛܒܘܬ from ܛܒܘܬ, is so simple and the sense so obvious, that it would be superfluous to cite them. For one who understands what verb forms such as ܦܥܠ or ܐܬܦܥܠ signify, it is superfluous to explain the meanings of the derived forms ܐܝܬܡܦܥܠ or ܐܝܬܬܦܥܠ. I am exceedingly amazed at how often such forms found somewhere in some new text are called additions to the lexicon. In this fashion, one can find in the case of a text published only recently, a certain verb in the 2m.pl.pf. explained as a word that was previously unknown. This matter, however, can be discussed at length. There should be no particular cause for regret when an Etpe'el form which designates a simple passive is sometimes missing in a Handwörterbuch, or when an Af'el which designates the simple causative of the Pe'al verb is not listed.

Proper nouns should be omitted. When Syriac literature is much better known in the future than it is now, there will be time to collect and organize Syriac and Persian personal and place names. Presently, the lexicographer should clearly be freed from the task of collecting the innumerable Greek and biblical names which are found by chance in Syriac texts. This is as if in a German dictionary one would present all the names from literary Arabic or the settlements of Sinai which are mentioned by chance in some German book.

The dictionary should definitely present the imperfect form of the Pe'al verbs, and the sg. abs., cs., or pl. forms of nouns. Forms should not be presented fully unless they are certain. The same should frequently be said about the vocalization. One should not insert fictitious vowels in words whose pronunciation is uncertain !

I do not feel that it is proper to utilize a Handwörterbuch for comparative linguistic purposes. This will easily lead one to futility and negligence. However, I do approve of the fact that this work presents vocabulary recovered from Assyrian on Peter Jensen's authority. There are many words which go against Syriac speech (e.g. ܓܒܝܠ which according to Syriac grammar should have been ܓܒܠ *). Therefore, it is clearly not superfluous to examine and to investigate methodically and carefully what words were borrowed into Aramaic speech from Assyrian. Doubt will remain as to whether some words were originally borrowed into both languages together from another common language.

The most scientific – and as must be admitted, by far also the single most convenient – method of organization is according to roots. This should be done particularly when organizing a dictionary, so that the words can be found in the easiest way possible. Those who do not know Hebrew well may be confused at least at first, since it may be a bit more difficult for the beginner to find מִפְעָל under the letter פ"ה than under מ"ם. He can, however, be taught straight from the beginning that הִפְעִיל should be sought under נפל. Nevertheless, there is no reason to think that words having three or four consonants should be organized alphabetically, for their actual roots can always be ascertained. Others may think differently with regard to these matters, and those who devote themselves to these studies in the future may feel differently about many matters. It might also seem perhaps useful to arrange II-w and II-y roots as biradicals just as is now already done with the geminate roots. This should be extended even for those secondary roots whose ultimate origin is clear, e.g. ܙܥܦ to be angry, and ܨܥ to connect. Nevertheless, however, I would place even ܒܥܦ s.v. ܙܥܨ, just as ܒܫܬܟ s.v. ܒܫܟ, directing the reader from ܙܥܦ to ܙܥܨ.

The authors of the Semitic dictionaries from the seventeenth century understood well that even foreign words should be arranged according to their first three consonants in order to be found more easily. I concede that there is something annoying with regard to this. In such a way ܚܢܟ is explained s.v. ܚܠܫ, and ܚܠܫܐ, s.v. ܚܠܫ. In truth, however, one is not so far from the other. The letter waw already presents us with some difficulties in Syriac, since we do not often know whether it expresses a long or a short vowel, or whether it belongs to a II-w or geminate root form. In Greek words, waw is sometimes used for Greek omicron and sometimes is omitted. Furthermore, even from ancient times, the Greek letter iota is very often – although not always – expressed by yod in rendering Greek words. Certain traditions transmitted many or all of the vowels in Greek words with vowel letters, i.e. alpha by the letter ålaf, and epsilon by the letter he. Therefore, if a Greek word is written in various ways, it is necessary to take into account that it must be indicated so in the dictionary. Moreover, it has to be inserted in distinct places in the dictionary, and the readings need to be cross-referenced from one place to another.

As a result, it is much simpler to place a substantive in the place which is indicated solely by the consonants. Someone looking for ܟܝܪܘܬܘܢܝܐ χειροτονία, will find it under the root ܚܦܣ where ܡܬܚܦܣ is also listed, and other forms, such as ܡܬܚܦܝܢ, can easily be supplied. The innumerable forms of the word παῤῥησία are easily collected under the root ܦܣܚ. Clearly, it would be desirable to list all of the forms written with both reš and he with each example chosen according to the reading. But not even the most perfect dictionary can present all of the forms in which one can write a particular Greek word at various periods. However, if it is arranged according to its first three consonants, when one comes across a new orthography in reading a new text, one can easily understand it by looking in the place where the other forms are found.

A Latin-Syriac index seems to me to be a most welcome addition to a Syriac dictionary. Indeed, having often used such indices in other Semitic dictionaries, I had wished to have one also for Syriac, something which has been lacking until now.

Finally, having said these things, I readily acknowledge that my only contribution to this work has been in giving some advice by letter to the author regarding the arrangement of the work and cases of both difficult and corrupt Syriac spellings.

Strasbourg, September, 1894.

Th. Nöldeke

APPENDIX 3: Prospect for the First Edition[1]

The present Handwörterbuch is meant to serve first and foremost as a convenient tool for reading texts, as well as to provide an overview of the vocabulary for the linguist. In order to achieve these two goals, the author has striven for the greatest possible completeness together with the greatest possible succinctness. Therefore, the book contains all of the words occurring in the published literature up until now, in all cases according to his own reading of the quoted citations.

The following words have been excluded:

1. Proper nouns – Not only do such words unnecessarily inflate the dictionary, but the treatment of Syriac personal names would additionally turn the book into a Syriac prosopography, and that of the place names into a geographical dictionary, so that the framework of the book would have been greatly exceeded.

2. The interface of lexicography and grammar – Where there are no specific grounds to speak against it, citations of derived forms have been excluded, except for references to the appropriate paragraphs of Nöldeke's Syriac Grammar. The treatment of prepositions and particles can be quickly grasped With the aid of such referrals.

3. The numerous Greek glosses transmitted only by Bar-'Alî and Bar-Bahlûl – Conversely, consideration of the requirements of philologists demands the inclusion of real Syriac and Persian words which have only been transmitted by the lexicographers.

4. All foreign elements which are expressly stated as being such in the literature

All of the linguistic material has been concisely arranged for the most part by roots in accordance with the structure of the Semitic languages. When the verbal root itself is still actively used, its various stems or conjugations are arranged in such a way that the nominal forms derived from them follow each one of them. On the other hand, denominative verbs as well as derived nominal forms naturally follow directly upon their basic form. Basic and derivative forms are clearly distinguished from one another by indentation. The form of the root is determined everywhere synchronically from the point of view of Syriac. Consequently, roots which had already disappeared in the pre-historic linguistic period have not been taken into account in establishing the Syriac root. For the sake of expedience, foreign words have also been adapted to the Semitic root scheme, viz. the first three consonants – with the exception of the vowel letters as well as he representing epsilon and eta internally in Greek words – are considered to be the word's root.

[1] The following is a translation of a shortened version of the German prospectus for LS^1 which the author found in a copy of this volume in the possession of the Israel National Library, Jerusalem. Quotations from a longer version which the publisher circulated are found in Rahlf's review of LS^1. This version was unavailable to the author.

Explanations have been given in Latin, because the choice of a modern language would most likely have limited the circulation of the book. The simultaneous use (of a vernacular) would have swelled the book's size out of proportion. In order to make the book's use easier, English translations have been added in those cases where the Latin expression may seem to be unclear.

A Latin index following the form found in the well known Hebrew dictionaries as well as in G. Freytag's Lexicon Arabico Latinum will further the practical use of the book.

Prof. Th. Nölkeke has written a Preface to the book which we hope that all readers will consider to be a worthy ornament to it.

APPENDIX 4: C. Brockelmann's Preface to the Second Edition

It is possible to call the newly produced Lexicon Syriacum, originally published thirty years ago, an entirely new edition. I have re-examined all of the texts used in the previous edition and have gone over many others, particularly the translations of texts. I have made use of all of those texts, or at least all those that I found, that have been printed since that time, and which I was able to consult. I was unable to make use of a number of books published by foreign presses during the war, since they were not received by the Berlin State Library after the printing of the first fascicles. After these books had been [later] studied, I collected the material that I had found in them in the Addenda. After the book was printed, the Supplement to Payne Smith's Thesaurus Syriacus, compiled by his daughter, was published, which I used for the Addenda Novissima. I will deal in the near future with some either doubtful or corrupt words which are not to be found here, in an article in ZS, vol. 6.[1]

For the sake of exactness, I have also striven to follow the principles employed in the first edition which the prominent scholars in this field have accepted. [The dictionary] can be used both by those who are learning the language and by those who are proficient in reading Syriac texts or to explain the rules of the language.

Therefore, I had to collect both the entire Aramaic and foreign vocabulary, that I found employed by both authors of good Syriac and by those of an inferior status. Several types of words have been excluded:

1. Proper nouns from the onomastica and the prosopography;
2. Vocabulary explicitly noted in Syriac literature as edriving from a foreign language or used by technical authors of a later period (e.g. in the appendices to the Syriac Book of Medicines);
3. Strange pseudo-Aramaic used by authors of a later period, such as in The Life of Rabban Hormizd edited by Budge;
4. Words falsely created by corruption;
5. Graeco-Hebraic words transliterated into Syriac script by the authors of the Syrohexapla;
6. Greek words transmitted only by the lexicographers and transferred from their works to the dictionaries.

In the preface to his Une version syriaque des aphorismes d'Hippocrate [II: Traduction. pp. i–x], H. Pognon seems to me to have proposed a very similar methodology. Though I have corrected some corrupt words in texts, it was not possible for me to collect all of the errors of the scribes, editors, and printers.

1 See now: Syriaca, ZS 6 (1928), pp. 1–5.

The [negative] prototype of Payne Smith has led me to exclude from the dictionary both Modern Syriac and Christian Palestinian Aramaic. Lest one be surprised and somewhat critical, let me say the following: What would a Latin philologist think of a Latin dictionary that mixed in Oscan and Umbrian, or scholars of Romance languages think of a dictionary of Old French which included the speech of Provence and modern French?

The origin of loanwords is given. P. Jensen has undertaken several studies in order to reveal those authors who first proposed etymologies, and, with the help of H. Zimmern, has paid attention to those words that originated in both Babylonian and Assyrian. He as undoubtedly done this most agreeably for the reader. However, he warns the reader that no one should think that he holds an opinion on the matter unless he himself has appended his name to it. All errors are the author's responsibility.

I have now also investigated the Semitic origins of Aramaic words which I had neglected to do in the previous edition, with the exception of homographs. I owe a deep debt of gratitude to F. Buhl and to those who assisted him in revising Gesenius' Hebräisches und Aramäisches Handwörterbuch über die Alte Testament (1915), primarily H. Zimmern. Words common to all of the Semitic languages are marked by SEM, with the omission of those forms agreeing with Syriac. I added Arabic forms to those which differ from the rules of the Aramaic dialects. I was desirous to prove matters that were only preserved by individual cases. Words from all the Aramaic dialects, very frequently used either in Mandaic, Jewish Babylonian, or Palestinian Aramaic, are marked as AR. Anyone versed in the matter knows how much we lack in order to be able to write a so-called comparative dictionary of the Aramaic dialects. However, one should be warned not to search for such a thing in this book.

I have arranged the vocabulary by the order of the roots. As for foreign words, they have been arranged according to their first three consonants.

The vocalization has been given according to the best authorities at my disposal, the printed editions of the Bible of Urmia and New York, and the grammarians. The war prevented me from going as I had once hoped to London and the Vatican to examine the Masoretic codices kept there. In order not to increase the difficulty of printing too much, and to keep the book's price reasonable, I have omitted employing the quššåyå and rukkåxå points except in doubtful cases.

I have added many words that seem to have been influenced by and subject to Hebrew and Greek translations. One should not forget that we lack concordances of the Syriac bible, except for those of E. Rosenwasser on the Book of Kings,[2] L. Techen on Psalms,[3] and the indices of Smend on Ecclesiasticus.[4] The efforts of O. Klein[5] and recently W. Jennings[6] on the NT should not be forgotten. Beginners should be warned that forms of words which one finds outside of the Bible are often not entirely consistent, and, in particular, the differences between Pa"el and Af'el cannot always be resolved. Since I am completely ignorant of botany, I have relied in these matters on the conclusions of I. Löw in his book Die Aramäische Pflanzennamen and in his recent Die Flora der Juden, which was available to me after the [printing of] the first fascicle. I refrained from investigating or dealingwith meanings to be explained in order, attempting to understand them with regard to the cognate languages rather that what may be called primary meanings.

Although many matters could have been presented more easily and more clearly in the vernacular, the dictionary is still written against my better judgment in Latin, so that the book will also be accessible to those outside of Germany.

It seemed quite useful to provide examples where I found specific words used by particular authors. I have added the oldest available attestations with additions from a later period, so that, as far as possible, the development of the language can be followed. Since no one has as yet examined the vocabulary employed by particular authors – except for Moberg's thorough studies of grammatical terminology which I gratefully used, and the small additions to the Patrologia Orientalis and Patrologia Syriaca – I had to rely everywhere on my own reading. No one should expect to find the history of words in this book as it is found in Grimm's Deutsches Wörterbuch or in the Thesaurus Linguae Latinae. What Paul de Lagarde once described as the rather immature era of Syriac philology has not escaped the notice of anyone in this field. I would ask the kind reader to excuse those errors which he finds here, since in a number of places examined until now, I did not have all of the necessary Syriac books at hand when correcting the proofs. This was particularly true after I moved to Berlin from Halle, the home of the library of the Deutsche Morgendländische Gesellschaft, having been lured on the false pretext of succeeding E.I. Sachau.[7] There was a promise of my being put in charge of Semitic studies in the capital. I was not only to come, but I was to receive a faculty position and a subsidy. My hope was soon shattered, since another person held that position, having acquired it for himself. I was compelled to return to the place where I finished the first edition,[8] riddled with difficulties on all sides, and burdened by a most serious lack of books. This could scarcely have been borne when I was in exile from the world of books were it not for the kindness of W. Printz, the head of the library. Regarding this, I request that reviewers should remember, that even after a long period of study, not even the newest dictionary of the Hebrew language is completely free of errors.

In order not to lengthen the book too much, the Latin index was prepared as follows: Active verbs were collected first, and passives and derived nouns were omitted. Thus, if one wishes to know the meaning of 'cingulum', one should look for it s.v. 'cinxit'.

It remains for me to thank the colleagues who helped me with their scholarship in this revised edition, who kindly informed me, and who were either left out or were given less than their due in the previous edition or in a particular fascicle. Among German scholars, W. Frankenberg and the lamented Fr. Schulthess, whose premature death cut short his scholarly work; among the Dutch, A.J. Wensinck; among the British, E.W. Brooks and N. MacLean, who transmitted to me the notes of A. Bevan and F. Burkitt. My debt to these individuals is marked in the various entries by their initials.[9] Equal thanks are due to that most dedicated publisher, M. Niemeyer, who, while his homeland was desolate, and not being motivated by an expectation of profit, but by a noble enthusiasm for publishing books, took upon himself the burden of the extremely heavy printing costs and brought the project unassisted to a fitting conclusion.
